

In Solidarity with North Africans

Freedom

“A State that does not respect the rule of law, a people paralyzed by fear, and a weak opposition...[The State] deliberately places above the laws the powerful who are not accountable to anyone. Nobody is allowed to criticize the powerful, nor to denounce or to evoke the corruption they are involved in. If you do, you will be thrown in jail. ...These very institutions are sometimes used to persecute the opponents to the current regime who dare criticize it. Their resources are cut short, they are starved and humiliated in such a way they will never forget. They are attacked on the street. Their children are harassed. All this is aimed at ensuring the continued existence of the regime and at guaranteeing its absolute power, a power whose legitimacy rests upon elections which take place in a climate of fear.” Tunisian activist Mohammed Abbou while describing the state of his country after 20 years with Ben Ali in power.
